A student at the University of Washington was hospitalized today after overdosing on LSD during a party at her dorm. According to police, the female student called 911 shortly after 1:30 a.m. today to report that someone had called her at 3:00 a.m. and told her, "You are going to die." The student told the operator that she went back to her dorm and was "in a party with at least 10 other people," but police were not able to confirm the student's identity. When asked if she was "OK," she said, "I'm still tripping." The student said she has been hallucinating for the past two days and had taken "more pills and drank" at the party. She then said she took "more pills" to prevent herself from "dying." Emergency medical responders arrived at the dormitory and transported the student to a local hospital. She is now in stable condition. The student has not been named or charged with a crime. “There is nothing that indicates this was an intentional suicide attempt,” said Officer Renee Witt, a police spokeswoman. “We are trying to determine if she just experienced a really bad trip.” The Washington Post reported that the University of Washington has a policy on the use of hallucinogenic drugs, stating that students, “must not manufacture or consume hallucinogens in any form” and “must not take any additional drugs without first seeking medical attention.” The Associated Press noted that according to the National Institute of Drug Abuse, “some of the worst hallucinogens are legally available at retail outlets.” Follow Blake on Twitter Send tips to blake@dailycallernewsfoundation.org.
