Slashdot, Digg... There were a few places I could have posted this, and many times I should have. What happened was that I tried to tell a friend about this invention, and to help her get a job at a lab that would be using this thing. I told her about the product, it was geared toward scientists, and how it would be a game changer.

Unfortunately, I had to explain the concept in a way that someone who had never done it before could understand. I failed in my attempt to teach someone else how to use my invention. I was a smart and successful person who failed when trying to help somebody else. Could this have been avoided? What would have happened if I had learned how to use my product before trying to teach someone else? Perhaps, if I had been able to use this tool, I
